HATTIESBURG PUBLIC LIBRARY SYSTEM
HATTIESBURG, MISSISSIPPI

While most people and certainly most libraries understand what it means to share, the word takes on a very special meaning at the Hattiesburg Public Library System. Whether through Project Share-A-Story, a special children's program, or sharing of specialized equipment, the library system is constantly working to share its resources with local citizens.

In fiscal year 1979, the Mississippi Library Commission awarded the Hattiesburg Public Library System a Library Services and Construction Act (LSCA) grant for Project Share-A-Story. The project was planned to demonstrate to Headstart groups, nursery workers, parents, Girl Scouts, city recreation workers, church groups and others how simple and vital it is to read aloud to young children.

Project Share-A-Story, which has become a continuing project, demonstrates simple techniques for making inexpensive hand puppets, flannel board stories, and finger games, all devices for enhancing the storytelling process. The project includes the development of a handbook to help interested people find stories and learn storytelling techniques.

Sharing at the Hattiesburg Public Library System also takes the form of story hours for preschoolers. For a period of six weeks, story hours for two-year-olds (accompanied by one parent) were held during the fall of 1980, with a staff member from the University of Southern Mississippi Infant Center conducting the activity. These story hours were repeated for an eight-week period during the spring with graduate students and the children's librarian in charge.

Story hours for 3-4-5 year-olds are also a special feature of the Hattiesburg Public Library Sytem. The story hours are planned for four-, six- or eight-week sessions due to space and staff limitations. In addition, library staff members frequently plan story hours, including reading aloud, flannel board, fingerplays, craft times, games, singing, hand puppets and role-playing, for visits to schools, Headstart groups and various nursery schools.

Library staff also work to involve the local community in the sharing process. Numerous tours of the library facilities are conducted throughout the year, including school groups, classes, Scouts and club members. During National Library Week, one school sends the entire first grade, making it an annual event.

The Hattiesburg Public Library System also participates in numerous special events in the community. One class from a local junior high school built their stage, wrote their play, made the puppets and produced the entire thing for young library patrons in the library's crowded children's room. Activities included a Stuffed Pet Show in the shopping mall, tours, special programs involving local citizens and the famous Leo, the Library Lion.

Another form of sharing at the Hattiesburg Public Library System takes the form of a rather different lending service. The library is actively involved in lending various pieces of equipment including Super 8 mm, 16 mm, sound filmstrip, slide and overhead projectors; portable public address system, screens, easels, bulletin boards, hook 'n loop board, projection stands and numerous accessories. This equipment is used by churches for instruction and entertainment for various age groups; by businesses for staff training sessions; for club programs for all ages; and by government officials, scouts, the Red Cross, banks, civic organizations, schools and more. The staff of the library feels that the loan of this equipment reaches segments of the community which is not as easily or readily served by the regular print services. The library reported that they recorded 584 loans of equipment during the year, not including their own use.

HARRIETTE PERSON MEMORIAL LIBRARY
PORT GIBSON, MISSISSIPPI

Mississippi: Cultural Crossroads promotes youth and community involvement in educational and cultural activities in Claiborne County. The organization, recently incorporated as a nonprofit corporation, is an outgrowth from a National Endowment for the Humanities planning grant awarded to the Harriette Person Memorial Library in Port Gibson in the fall of 1978.

Since its inception, the organization has had a unique relationship with the local library. Governed by a local board which includes librarian Nancy Batton, the group has sponsored numerous programs and projects in conjunction with the library.

Funding for the organization comes from a variety of sources including grants from public and private agencies, local government grants and private contributions. For every dollar of local tax money received from November 1978 to August 1981, Mississippi: Cultural Crossroads has generated more than five dollars of additional funding to support educational and cultural programs for Claiborne County.

Since its beginning, Mississippi: Cultural Crossroads has sponsored a film series in conjunction with the library. The organization has coordinated field trips for area high school students to the Delta Blues Festival, the Old Capitol Museum, the Mississippi Authority for Educational Television and Foxfire in Rabun Gap, Georgia.

In the summer of 1980 Mississippi: Cultural Crossroads and the Harriette Person Memorial Library sponsored a two-week art program for young children in the community. Funding for the program was provided by the Mississippi Arts Commission and the Claiborne County Board of Supervisors. Student work from the art program was displayed at the library at the conclusion of the program.

The National Endowment for the Arts awarded Mississippi: Cultural Crossroads a grant in the amount of $9,809 to survey and document the folk art and culture of Claiborne County using high school students as the primary researchers. A mounted photographic show and a student-produced magazine entitled I Ain't Lying were the result of this project. In May 1981, the organization received a $3,800 grant from the Field Foundation to help defray the cost of printing I Ain't Lying.

The Summer of 1981 brought two additional Mississippi: Cultural Crossroads/library projects. A two-week drama workshop in June was followed by an art program during July. Funding for both projects was provided by the Claiborne County Board of Supervisors and the Mississippi Arts Commission. A show of children's work from the summer program was on display in the library during the month of October.

In September 1981 the Claiborne County Board of Supervisors voted an appropriation of $10,000 (for fiscal year 1982) to Mississippi. Cultural Crossroads to be paid through the Harriette Person Memorial Library. With this support, the organization plans to rent office space, pay for part-time administrative and secretarial services as well as sponsor a continuing series of educational and cultural activities for the citizens of the county.

Immediate plans include a Media Arts Residency which will enable area high school students to learn photography and magazine editing while working on the second issue of I Ain't Lying. A week-long folk residency is scheduled for February.

Future plans include another two-week summer art program and a traveling Peanut Butter and Jelly Theater for June 1982.

NESHOBA COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY
PHILADELPHIA, MISSISSIPPI

A Scholar in Residence program at the Neshoba County Public Library has had a snowball effect in the local area. Located in Philadelphia, the library has seen tremendous involvement on the part of local citizens in library-related programs and projects.

Funded by the Mississippi Committee for the Humanities, the Scholar in Residence program provided for a scholar in the humanities to explore issues of human concern in the local community. Dr. Seena Kohl of Webster College in St. Louis, Missouri, served as scholar in residence. The scholar program enabled the Choctaw Indian, black, and white residents to examine the heritage of each group through both oral and visual history.

Specific elements of the Neshoba project included the development of historical resources for the different and common histories of the major three populations in the county, the stimulation of interest within and across the three groups in their own and each other's histories, and the preparation of a visual exhibit for display at the Choctaw Indian Fair and the Neshoba County Fair. The project concentrated on previously inarticulate populations and populations whose history and traditions had been overlooked and ignored.

A weekly column in the Neshoba Democrat provided an opportunity for local residents to rethink history and the ways in which Neshoba County is unique or similar to other places. The column pointed out how the same event affected different populations and how a personal event related to other peoples' lives and the community.

Throughout the year, project participation snowballed as more and more county residents became involved. A large number of local residents began collections of family genealogies and histories, letters, petitions, church records, and family, school and community recollections. A visual exhibit evolved from the photographs local residents brought into the library in response to the newspaper columns and club talks.

In response to the local interest in local and family history, a genealogical research class was provided by the Mississippi State University Extension Division. The classes, which were held in the library for ten evenings, provided an opportunity for library staff to upgrade their skills.

High school students and one fourth grade class became involved in class projects to collect their family trees. In addition, two Sunday afternoon workshops dealing with the collection of family history and developing genealogical research skills were held in the library led by members of the county historical society, the library staff and the scholar in residence.

In response to the project's tremendous success, a local music club submitted a proposal to the Mississippi Committee for the Humanities and the Mississippi Arts Commission for a music specialist to organize and demonstrate aspects of traditional Choctaw music. The demonstration involved both Choctaw and non-Choctaw elementary and early education teachers. The music collection has been donated to the library.

Other spin-offs of the project included an exhibit on "Neshoba County - the First 100 Years" at the Choctaw Museum of the Southeastern Indian during the Choctaw Indian Fair and the Neshoba County Fair. An exhibit of Afro-American quilts, as well as local material, crafts and photographs, have been displayed in library exhibit cases throughout the year.

All of these activities have functioned to increase use of the library and to emphasize the various ways the library serves its constituency. The activities have underscored the library as a local institution interested in Neshoba County, its people and their past histories and common future.

LEE-ITAWAMBA LIBRARY SYSTEM
TUPELO, MISSISSIPPI

A two-year self-study involving local citizens, library staff and library board members is currently being conducted by the Lee-Itawamba Library System headquartered in Tupelo. The study, called a Planning Process for Public Libraries, was developed by the Public Library Association of the American Library Association.

A 35-member planning committee is working with Jane Smith, MLC consultant, who is serving as advisor facilitor for the system.

The planning committee is currently in the final stages of the data gathering phase for the planning processes. Committee and staff members have examined in detail the present status of library services and conducted surveys for committee members, trustees and staff concerning attitudes and expectations of the present and future function of the library.

A User Survey has been conducted four times, and retrospective statistics have been compiled for detailed analysis. Further data concerning a community profile for Lee County and on alternative sources of information are being researched.

Planning committee meetings are being monitored by an area resident, Anabelle Stephens, in preparation for a doctoral study on the Planning Process which she will conduct for her dissertation.

The result of the Planning Process will be a Mission statement for the Lee-Itawamba Library System and projected five-year goals with objectives and strategies for accomplishment. The target date for completion coincides with the budget request deadline for 1982.

In addition to the self-study, a number of on-going activities are included in the program of the Lee-Itawamba Library System. The Helen Foster Lecture Series, funded by a trust which was endowed by the will of Mrs. Helen Foster, long-time chairman of the Lee County Library Board of Trustees, has been a tremendous success. The trust fund, used to fund programs not possible through regular funds, has enabled the library to bring nationally known speakers to Tupelo.

Among those who have been featured in the lecture series are David Halberstam, Willie Morris, Elizabeth Janeway, Frank Cappiello, Sir Robert Mark, Hedrick Smith, Nancy Dickerson, Peter Lisagor, Elmo Zumwalt and Werner Von Baum. Attandance has ranged from 200 to 900, with an average attendance of 450.

The Library Browser is a monthly radio program which previews the activities scheduled at the library in the coming month. A staff member records the script which is written by assistant director Leith Perez-Velasco. Included in the script are activities, new book titles, reasons to use the library and news of library personnel.

The Lee County Library Newsletter is a bi-monthly publication which began as a project of National Library Week 1981. The newsletter features human interest articles and serves as a public relations tool in telling the library story. Reports of the past month's events and projections of future events provide the focus for the departmental reporting. Gift books and their donors are a regular feature of the newsletter.
